"I never stopped making art. Art gave me energy when I thought I had none left. It is an infinite fountain, if you let it into your life."
- M

Marcus Kirsch is a Royal College of Art alumnus, award-winning and best-selling author, artist and thought leader on wicked problems and creative team-building.

Over nearly 30 years, he has explored the human body's physicality and its behaviour within its cultural context. Having lived in Germany and the UK and visited places like Brazil, Colombia, Saudi Arabia, Slovakia and many others to create art and run workshops, his inspirations come from an eclectic level of experiences and observations. He has been a gymnast, skateboarder, capoeirista, climber, ballroom dancer all expanding what it means to challenge oneself and express in physicality. The philosophy that body and identity are one thing stems from his childhood experience with allergies, where his mind was able to affect his body, often in a negative way. His work reflects on the connection between body and mind, its sacredness and the uncertainty present, when we engage with each other.
